ORDERLYNESS UNUSUAL

The Conservative party in Mexico has nominated a candidate for president. It is some time since that there is a Conservative party in that eruptive republic. Also that any opposition party dares to openly nominate a candidate for the rulership without first mobilizing its army and getting in a supply of ammunition. Mexico must be enjoying a period of comparative tranquility.

EVERY SHOWER IS GOOD NEWS

Southern Alberta got several hours' rain on Sunday. That will be a blessing to the farmers in those districts, and is good news to the whole province. Wheat seeding is practically finished, and the oat crop is being put in. Upon rainfall during the next few weeks depends the outcome. Every shower that falls anywhere in the province at this time is assurance that the season is not to be a dry one. When the precipitation occurs in the west where rainfall is normally light the assurance is stronger than other wise.

A WILLING QUITTER

British communists say they would quit work if war were declared against the Soviet. Of course they quit. It doesn't take a war to get the communist to quit. Quitting work is his long suit. He will do it on the slightest provocation. He doesn't believe in work anyway. His ambition is to get along without it. There will be war with Russia, but the world will not keep the British communist the job. He will "chuck it" anyway as soon as things pick up a bit. He is only working now because there are not enough other people working to keep him in idleness.

ANOTHER ONE GOES WRONG

The superintendent of the Government "control" system in British Columbia has been arrested on a charge of collecting hash money from whisky clubs. A few years ago the superintendent of the prohibitory law in the same province was charged with collecting hash money. These incidents do not prove that either system is impracticable, or that either is peculiarly liable to develop official crookedness. There were honest commissioners in the old days who seemed to live on a more splendid scale than their salaries accounted for. Under any system the officials who are charged with the administration of liquor laws are subject to temptation, and occasionally one is found who prefers money to honor. Eternal vigilance is the price of keeping the liquor department of any government straight.

THE OUTLOOK NOT GOOD

Washington dispatches announce that the leaders of the farm bloc in Congress are hostile to Mr. Harding's proposal to negotiate a new reciprocity treaty. That particular piece of news is hardly worth the telegraph tolls. If anybody supposed that the political farmers at Washington would shout for the admission of Canadian farm products into the markets of the republic he is seriously unaware of the trend of things across the border. The United States farmer is enjoying a period of prosperity that has made him forget his post-war experiences on the economic rack. Where he reasons wrongly or rightly, he is firmly convinced that the tariff and other standard foodstuffs was a powerful factor in stimulating a keener demand for his products and in strengthening the prices offered for them. It is certainly not to the advantage of the Harding administration to encourage that notion, nor to begin to pull down the barrier which the farmer thinks has sheltered him against ruinous competition. The administration is just about as little likely to do that as the farm bloc would be to support the program. If Mr. Harding can keep the manufacturers and the farmers pulling together as they are doing now until political day comes round the Democrats have just about as much chance of winning as the Liberals have in Ontario. Regrettably as it is, reciprocity seems at present to be a remote prospect and may as well admit that fact and look for markets somewhere else. The conditions of 1911 are not the conditions of 1923.

THE FARMER DOES IT AGAIN

The Western farmer has put in another crop of wheat. That can hardly be other than surprising to those who have gathered their impressions of the financial position and prospects of that much-discussed individual from those who are supposed to represent his business situation to the world. To put in another crop of wheat must have seemed to the readers of these official pronouncements to be one thing that the great majority of Western farmers could not do, and that the minority who could do it had been demonstrated not to do. It has been demonstrated in black and white with imposing columns of operating costs and strident columns of statistics, that the prairie farmer has been losing money hand over fist growing wheat; that those who grow most of it are the worst off; and that those who had been at it longest are nearest to the porphyrus. Some alleged experts and agricultural journals seem to have made it their mission in life to prove that the wheat grower was never more than one jump ahead of the sheriff, and that at the present time that minion of the law has him firmly by the collar. As for the farmer himself, he has been spending his time and money in the winter selling the world that their constituents were in the last gasp of economic exhaustion. And the lead of the farmers' organization informed a committee of Parliament that a while ago that Western agriculture had handicapped itself trying to feed the world at less than cost. Upon the showing of these authorities it did seem that the financial bottom had dropped completely out from under the farmer, and that Europe would have to get its wheat supply where it could and that whatever the Western farmer might do to put in the time this spring he would not waste it hurrying seed wheat to the black soil of his homestead. To cap the climax the Greenfield Government out in to say that it wouldn't back the Alberta farmer in that line of business. Therefore, if he wanted to gamble on growing wheat or any other crop he would have to get the seed from his neighbors, or the elevator owners, or the seed houses, or the wheat-belt government, but wouldn't advance seed or seed money to anybody.

The Western farmer, it appears, has been taking all his outpouring of lamentation as more or less theoretical. The experts might be right when they told him he was not making wages and interest on his investment, but farming on paper was not in his line. His Parliamentary representatives might really mean well, though they seemed to be saying that he ought to know better than stay on the job when he was working for nothing and boarding himself. Perhaps, like other people, he rather liked to be sympathized with. But now, fortunately for the world, the farmer is a practical chap; and he is not playing up to the lead that his leaders have given him. He cannot get it out of his head that there is something to be said on the other side of the question; that it is better to grow something than nothing, whatever the momentary money loss may prove and that if wheat growing is the money-losing game they claim, it is a dark mystery how so many men came to the West with nothing and got rich at the business. Therefore, in sheer defiance of the logic of the arm chair agriculturists, the farmer has "hopped to it" and put in another crop of wheat and will proceed to sow some oats and barley and other feed crops when the time comes. He did not even wait for assurance that a wheat board will be set up to speculate with his grain and his tax money. In fact the impression is growing that he will be rather pleased if that project is again side-tracked, as it is fairly likely to be. And the refusal of the Government to back his note for seed does not seem to have concerned him. He is a practical chap, and he is not carrying on, nor prevented him doing so.

Estimates show that over the prairie country about the nominal amount of land has been put down to wheat, and that the total under grain crops is likely to be as large as common. The weather has been generally favorable so far as working the land is concerned; perhaps more favorable than the farmer would have liked. Good, soaking downpours of rain or heavy falls of snow would have been welcomed in many districts, and would have made up in quick germination the loss of time they caused. But from many directions reports are that the wheat is well above ground, showing that—though drier than desirable—conditions are not generally and severely adverse. The farmer and nature are thus functioning as usual, and pulling together to produce another crop in its season, and their joint efforts will do a good deal before winter comes to pull the country out of the hole. If the theorists and politicians will only lay off, and stop discouraging the farmer and libelling his business, that, too, will help some.

Current Comment

A COMMERCIAL TAX DOESN'T WORK

The graduated income tax has been called one of the most profitable of all forms of taxation. No doubt it is in theory. But it is one thing to impose a tax, and another to collect it. And this is particularly the case where every man is his own boss.

As a matter of fact, experience in Canada is showing that when it comes to a graduated income tax the average conscience is a pretty convenient affair. Take the figures published in the Financial Post for the year 1922. Of 250,000 persons of all classes who admitted taxable incomes in 1922, 247,000 were employed whose wages or salaries were on record available to the government, and more than half the population of Canada were living on the land and yet less than 10,000 taxpayers admitted to income tax under the act. Of course, this was a hard year on the agricultural class, but who will seriously advance that there are more than ten times as many wage earners in Canada as farmers whose income is taxable and yet only 15,000 professionals and business men paid income tax last year? The fact is that a rather broad interpretation of the word "various sources" is made in the act.

A great deal is heard from the farmers and more from the politicians who cater to them, but the figures indicate that the wage and salary earners are really paying the tax and making no fuss about it. They are the ones who are supplying the great bulk of the tax funds to finance the government.

Canada wants a tax which will be equitable in operation as well as in theory. The income tax as it is now operating is not such a tax.

A COLUMN FOR THE COMMON PEOPLE

In England a private soldier was acquitted at a court-martial on a charge of insubordination. It was said because he had saved an officer to treat him as a human being, not a dog. We have three better in Canada, and from the questions received, from the hat-throwers, chicken-scarecrows, if it is correct, and Crown and Anchor, we find that everything in the C.M.P. was lovely. No complaints!
